Background

David Alvarez is not your typical 18-year-old University of Bridgeport business management student. For starters, his young life has been dominated by serious health issues that impacted his mobility. Inspired by his journey to improved health, Alvarez sought to inspire others through his experience and the lessons he absorbed in an entrepreneurship class at Seymour High School. The University equipped Alvarez with something other than a solid undergraduate education in business: it gave him direct access to experts from its Innovation Center, Ernest C. Trefz School of Business, and the Student Entrepreneur Center (SEC) who helped him grow his apparel start-up into a unique brand.
